WM. HODGSON.

From the Charleston Courier.

We wish to know what the writer of that notification meant, if indeed he had any meaning at all, when he threw out that useless, ridiculous insinuation, "security against the vices and miseries of European nations." For our parts, we are at a loss to conjecture it. Does he mean the adultery, fornication, murders, gambling, and female wantonness of those nations—let him look about him, and be convinced that whatever effect Louisiana may hereafter produce upon the public morals, in those trifling things, we have hitherto had no particular security, or exemption from a share in them. We have our crim-cons, our divorces, our marriages, re-marriages and cross marriages, as well as the best of them: and unless we except Turkey, (France is cut out of the moral world) it would be cruel irony to say that the spot on which he stands yields to any part of Europe, the palm in pluralities of wives, husbands, sweethearts and lovers. In many parts of the union, we hold a very respectable rank of competition with Europe, in dice, cards, racing, duelling and throat cutting, for the honour of the thing. And reckoning by the tail, population against population, we venture to assert that for a comfortable share of nudity, for that undisguised, open, innocent disposition to keep as little as possible concealed, and lay open the inmost recesses of the bosom; and as the philosopher once wished, that the human breast was made of glass, that the secret movements of every heart might be seen—to veil the person with such a transparent covering that every movement of every muscle may be seen, our own country may vie with any country in Europe; except as before excepted, that present sink of iniquity, France.

Surely the writer could not by the vices and miseries of Europe, mean the villainies of Revolutionary France, or the miseries with which it has bespread Europe. Those are blessings which all the partisans and writers of his faction, endeavoured with all their might and ingenuity to introduce into this country.

When the writer speaks of the possession of Louisiana securing us from dangerous and hostile neighbours, he only just recognizes and admits a proposition of ours, which he and his party denied, when they found it convenient to deny the use of Louisiana, and the good policy of taking possession of it.

What the writer means by saying that the "Acquisition of Louisiana provides new means of defence against an evil entailed on us by those from whom we snatched our Independence," we can little more than guess at. Does he mean the business of slave and owner? As well might he say it was entailed on us by the Romans, or any other of the nations of the earth, all of whom have dealt in that business. If he were asked why the same arm that snatched the Independence did not cut off that evil at the same time, he would not be able to give a satisfactory answer. If he gave a true one, he would say thus: "for the same reason we support Jacobinism; because it suits our purposes, and is congenial to our hearts." That evil, however, is one which will probably be set right one way or other. The equality men of the faction are in the direct road to a complete equalization of us all, high and low, rich and poor, good and bad, black and white. The apotheosis of an individual for an act which, if it were even well done, would be only a duty, is no short stride towards despotic influence; a few more strides, and we may be assured that though the slaves cannot all be made free, the freemen will all be made slaves. If, however, those from whom we snatched our independence have entailed upon us that evil, it must be owned that it has furnished us also with the means of defence against it. No human impudence & falsehood; not those of Bonaparte himself will look the world full in the face and deny that it is to England's going to war with France we owe Louisiana. It is not altogether fair then to attack her in the moment we are rejoicing for the acquisition for which we are in so great a measure indebted to her.

Capt. Hills, in 24 days from Lisbon, arrived at Boston, informs that no expectations were entertained when he sailed, that either Spain or Portugal would be involved in the war. NOTICE.—in virtue of authority to me delegated by the Mayor and Common Council of the Town of Alexandria, I assign as a place for the sale of fresh shad and herrings, from and after the 1st day of April next the Wharf of Mr. James Keith, a little to the south of the present harbour of this town: and for the information of every person concerned in the premises, I hereby subjoin an extract from the law passed by the authority aforesaid, for the regulation of that and other subjects connected therewith.

JOHN MANDEVILLE,

Superintendent of Police.

March 30th, 1804.

SEC. 6. Be it enacted, That no person shall sell, offer, or keep for sale, any fresh shad or herrings, at any place within the town, but in such place as shall be assigned by the Superintendent of Police, and all fresh fish of the above description hereafter brought to the town shall have their entrails and the gills of the shad taken out at the places allotted for selling the same, or before they be brought ashore, except such herrings as shall be cured whole by the inhabitants for the use of their families, or shad for immediate use, or be purchased for the purpose of removing from the said town. Any person offending herein shall forfeit and pay at the rate of one dollar for every hundred shad, or for every thousand herrings so sold, offered, or kept for sale, contrary to this act; and the like penalty for every hundred shad, or thousand herrings, brought into town without being cleaned as aforesaid, and every person who shall throw, or cause to be thrown on any of the wharves, or into any of the docks, streets, lanes, alleys, or other parts of the town the offals of any fish as aforesaid shall for every such offence forfeit and pay fifty cents; and moreover be compelled to move the same.

Extract of a letter from an officer of the British Navy to a respectable merchant in New York, dated London, February 18.

"The news of the season, until within a few days, has been totally absorbed by the intended invasion; but during that time his Majesty has been most seriously ill, and so continues. Various are the reports as to his absolute complaint; but the which seem to preponderate is to be gout, or dropsy in the stomach, and the opinions are certainly warranted by an indisposition from which he had but lately recovered. You know enough of England, and of the opinions of its people, to be well aware, that this circumstance, more particularly at the present crisis, must strongly agitate the public mind. Never was it more agitated than at present. But I hope the fears for his Majesty, which certainly are very great arise very generally, from an excess of anxiety. All that I can say, and all that is said elsewhere on this melancholy subject, is I am confident, founded on no better basis than conjecture.

I shall not pretend to give you the opinions of others respecting the intended invasion. You must be satisfied with mine to form which I have taken considerable pains.

It is then, that the ultimate issue of the present contest, admitting that we are left to decide it by ourselves, will be on British ground; and, that I feel no sort of doubt, that that issue, will be glorious in the annals of British history. Great as our superiority at sea certainly is, yet that superiority cannot command all points. It is well known how very uncertain all things connected with maritime affairs are—though their arrangements will not be prevented from effecting a descent, yet, they will, in all human probability, suffer severe loss, as well from our flying; or I should have said detached squadron, as from our sea-fencibles. S. e. king of this body of our force, I must observe, that they are extremely well organized.

All boats on the coast are fitted to carry from a twelve to a thirty two pound cannonade, and all persons at all connected with them, or who obtain their livelihood on the water, are enrolled in this body, who are commanded by navy officers, mostly of tried and approved courage and experience. To doubt of the efficiency of these boats, managed by persons who have been bred in them from their infancy, and of their superiority to those of the enemy, would be ridiculous. But it cannot be expected, that a very large body of them will be able to be collected, and brought into action together; yet we may expect that from the facility and the ability with which even a small body of them will be collected and managed, they will embarrass and cause great slaughter in the invading militia. We will admit that one, or even two hundred thousand men, are landed; but the first is a much larger force than I think it possible for them to land within a month or six weeks of each other. To have fears of the issue, we must admit, that the French, as a nation, possess superior courage. This is contradicted by the history of the last war. Our force is, at least, in regulars, militia and volunteers, 700,000.

The rest of the population are enrolled in the levee en masse. Is it probable that 200,000 men can conquer such a people, unanimous and well disciplined? I know volunteers are ridiculed and despised by those who have not seen them, or having seen them, could see no use in them, unless they were French. But, it will be said, the French are veteran troops. I say, look into Egypt and St. Domingo, for a very large reduction in their veterans. It will also be said that they are superior in officers, in tactics and discipline. I confess there is, as a general principle great truth in this; but let it not be forgotten, that the British gave a pretty good specimen of their progress in these very necessary acquirements throughout the campaign. Thus, then you have my opinions; but least they should be mistaken, I say that while we continue unanimous, we may despise and brave the whole power of Europe. Every day's delay more strongly supports my opinion.

COMMERCE.

According to an account published in a late English paper, the Commerce of that country experiences but little diminution by a French war. To evince this, a statement is made of the Imports and Exports during the year 1798, in which period the influence of France on the continent was predominant, and her hostility to British Commerce most violent. In that year the imports in the port of London alone, amounted to £20,967,412, and the exports to £29,630,559: of this there was imported from the United States to the port of London alone, £1,517,386; and exported from the latter to the former £3,898,864.

Died, suddenly, at Kingston, at the advanced age of 106 years, George Gregory, supposed to be the last of the crew of the Centurion, which ship circumnavigated the world with Lord Anson; and what is more remarkable, he never had a days illness, since he went to sea, which was in the year 1744, when he was impressed in the Downs out of the Mary, brig, belonging to North Shields.

To Rent,

For one or more years, that valuable DISTILLERY AND MILL, Late the Property of General GEORGE WASHINGTON of Mount Vernon, situated on a navigable creek within nine miles of Alexandria.

This Distillery has five large Stills and a Boiler erected upon the late improved plan, with sheds for raising and fattening Hogs, also stalls for thirty Bees.

In point of situation none can exceed it, the easy access to Maryland, will always ensure the greatest abundance of grain for carrying on the distilling business in its most extensive scale, independent of its own neighbourhood, which has always been able to supply it. The mill will require some repairs, which will be done at the proprietor's expense; she has manufactured large quantities of Flour, and may easily be made to do it again: To this mill is a cooper's shop, and a comfortable dwelling house. Application to be made to the subscriber, near the spot.
